Faculty Senate discusses guidelines, Pre-College communication strategy

The University Council will meet Sept. 30 to discuss the recent decision by the Academic Affairs committee of the Board of Trustees to postpone action on guidelines defining faculty competencies and governing faculty evaluations, Dr. William Marshall, chairman of the Faculty Senate, announced at a senate meeting Sept. 23 in "Ole Jim."

In a recent letter to Provost Harvey Corson, Marshall noted that during President Edward C. Merrill's administration, only those portions of the faculty guidelines "dealing with personnel resource issues" were presented to the board for action, and "all other areas were presented for review and information sharing purposes."

During the administration of President Jerry Lee, however, Pre-College Programs began submitting guideline changes to the board for approval, and eventually the University Faculty was "forced to follow suit—absent the presence of written authority to do so," Marshall wrote.

Marshall noted that the University Faculty recognizes the "ultimate authority" of the board, and said that the faculty has no desire to "enter into a power struggle." The faculty is willing to send guidelines to the board that "come within its exclusive aegis," he wrote.

In other action, Dr. Larry Stewart of the Psychology Department asked the senate to request that the provost report on the details of the communication strategy now being used by Pre-College Programs. The policy "strongly encourages" Pre-College faculty and staff to sign without voice and use American Sign Language as much as possible.

In a document he distributed to the senators, Stewart wrote there is no "definitive evidence one way or another concerning the effectiveness of any specific method of communication or specific language in the education of deaf children."

Stewart expressed concern in the document that the direction being taken by Pre-College Programs was not appropriate for all deaf and hard of hearing children. He also asked, among other things, if a comprehensive program plan has been developed for the new approach, and if teachers, parents, and students had been informed of its risks and benefits.

Corson responded by pointing out

Convocation, variety of other events mark fifth year of university status

The Gallaudet community has plenty of reasons to celebrate this year during University Week Oct. 20-26. Not only does 1991 mark the fifth anniversary of Gallaudet's status as a University, but this year the University was reaccredited by the Middle States Association and received a $12 million grant from the Kellogg Foundation for the Conference Center for Training and Development.

University Week will recognize the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA)—which will be enacted on Jan. 1, 1992—by taking advocacy as its theme.

"It is a pleasure and a privilege for me to be a part of Gallaudet during this period of dynamic change," said President I. King Jordan. "I look forward to celebrating with [the campus community] all the activities during University Week."

"There is so much to choose from, from convocation to educational forums, and things that are just plain fun," said Provost Harvey Corson. "I encourage everyone to take advantage of these opportunities, which remind us that we are, indeed, a full-fledged University with programs and services for everyone."

The advocacy theme will be explored in an Advocacy Fair and workshops on Thursday, Oct. 24, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Elstad Auditorium, and Friday, Oct. 25, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in Ely Center. Workshops will focus on various aspects of the ADA and on multicultural training. Registration is required.

A convocation will be held on Friday, Oct. 25, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. Honorary degrees will be awarded to Connecticut Governor Lowell Weicker Jr. (Ind.) and actress Linda Bove. Actress Phyllis Frelich also was chosen to receive an honorary degree but will not be able to attend.

Weicker, who will be the main convocation speaker, was a driving force behind the congressional act that made Gallaudet a university. He also was the first senator to introduce the ADA proposal, according to Sue Ellis, director of Congressional Relations in the President's Office.

Ellis, who described Weicker as "a giant among advocates," said, "In the 1980s, in times of strict fiscal restraints, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, then-Senator

WFD Congress reaffirms sign

The continued support and acceptance of sign language was the highlight of the XI World Congress of the World Federation of the Deaf (WFD) held in July in Tokyo, Japan, according to Dr. Yerker Andersson, WFD president and professor of sociology at Gallaudet University.

"Equality and Self-Reliance" was the theme of the Congress, the first ever held outside North America or Europe.

Ronald Wiman of the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs reaffirmed UN support for the use of sign language in both social and educational settings and provision of sign interpreting in schools and at public functions.

It remains to be seen how the various national federations of deaf people will react to the UN action, Andersson said. "If they decide to follow up they are likely to put pressure on their governments to support sign language use," he said.

"If the national government hesitates, the federation of the deaf can contact the WFD for help. We can then ask the UN to put pressure on the government."

Several scientific commissions meeting during the Congress declared that sign language must be respected. They also said that schools for deaf students should be supported and that cochlear implants were not acceptable for children. "If cochlear implants fail to improve a child's hearing, they are very difficult to remove when the child is older," Andersson explained. "In addition, cochlear implants may prevent chilchildren from competing in sports, especially swimming."

The WFD delegates, who represented 37 countries, adopted a new WFD constitution with four important new provisions. The constitution for the first time recognizes deaf people as a sociocultural group and sign language as a natural language. Second, it requires all delegates to be deaf. Previously, each country was allotted two delegates, one of whom was to be deaf. Third, the WFD has dropped French as the official language of the organization and will now use either Gestuno (also known as international sign language) or English. Fourth, the WFD will no longer have scientific commissions. Instead, the WFD will compile a list of experts and consult them on scientific matters.

The delegates also elected a new board, resolved to work more closely with groups of people with disabilities other than deafness, and accepted a proposal by the National Association of the Deaf (NAD) to allow the NAD to more actively assist the International Congress on Education of the Deaf (ICED) in its efforts to research and improve deaf education.

The assembly voted to make Mervin Garretson, former special assistant to the president at Gallaudet, an honorary member in recognition of his work as a member of the WFD pedagogy commission.

The Congress' opening ceremonies were attended by 7,000 members from 55 countries, as well as Prince and Princess Hitachi of Japan. Prince Hitachi opened the Congress.

Shinichiro Shimojo, Japan's Health and Welfare Minister, and Katsutsugu Sekiya, the country's Post and Telecommunications Minister, addressed the Congress.

Shimojo recognized past discrimination against deaf Japanese and promised to support their fight for equality. He also awarded a grant supporting the Congress to the WFD.

As a plenary speaker, Gallaudet President I. King Jordan presented a lecture, "Equality and Self-Reliance." Dr. Allen Sussman of the Gallaudet Counseling Center also presented a plenary address, "The Depathologization of Deafness: Ingredients for Equality and Self-Reliance."

During the Congress, Dr. Jordan and Philip Bravin, chairman of the Gallaudet Board of Trustees, visited an exhibit of works by Japanese architects at the University of Tsukuba, which is interested in starting an exchange program with Gallaudet.

The next WFD Congress will be held Vienna, Austria, in 1995.
